It does it make sense with today's technology that short interest is only updated once every 15 days, it needs to be updated daily. Also the T +2 rule, Makes absolutely no sense either. The only thing it does is make naked short selling more prevalent in the stock market today. It should be T +0. This is evidenced by MRIN stock Who short interest was up to 216% even though the utilization rate had been capped out at 100% for weeks before hand. It is obvious to millions and millions of retail investors that naked short selling is going rampant throughout the marketplace.
