RE: Request for public commentary on proposed FINRA Rule 2380 (Leverage Limitation for Retail Forex)

Ms. Marcia E. Asquith

A crisis in the capital markets too often results in more harm than good being done when politicians and bureaucrats feel the need to "do something" in order to prove that they are on the job. For example, The Securities Act of 1933. The "accredited investor" status was created in order to "protect the little guy". All it did was prevent "the little guy" from having access to the best deals. The standards, as defined in the rule, are meaningless when it comes to actual financial sophistication. Madoff ring a bell?

Sarbanes-Oxley pushing capital to foreign markets, forced mark-to-market accounting killing off Bear Stearns et al., OFHEO being castigated by Congress in 2004 for trying to rein in Fannie/Freddie, the SEC asleep at the switch regarding Madoff and don't get me started on the bogus "Stimulus" bill. The biggest issues in the US capital markets are caused by either do-gooder regulations which run head first into the Law of Unintended Consequences or by incompetence on the part of the regulators and legislators who are supposed to be minding the store.

Retail Forex traders are well aware of what high leverage means and it is one of the main reasons we seek out this market place. Actual leverage is reduced by simply taking an appropriate position size relative to available capital based on the calculated risk/reward ratio for a trade. This is accomplished by the use of an appropriate stop or hedge. This reduces the effective leverage on a trade by trade basis. I would hope that anyone seeking to regulate a market would understand this, although the wording of the proposal casts serious doubt on this.

We don't need to be protected from ourselves by regulators and legislators who are under the microscope for failing at their previously assigned duties. An effort to reduce the leverage available in the retail forex market will simply cause a mass closing of US based brokers with the subsequent loss of many jobs and the flow of capital to non-US based brokers. I realize the increased capital requirements on forex brokers by the NFA has caused smaller brokers to seek the FINRA umbrella. Rather than tossing them out into the street, why don't you work with them in a way that is mutually beneficial? We need honest brokers, regardless of their size, and their size simply needs to be proportional to their customer base. Like an honest auto mechanic, a good broker will attract money on its own.

This "idea" is just as poorly thought out and presented as the NFA's recent request to the CFTC to stop hedging in the forex markets. All this attention to the forex markets makes me wonder what's really going on. I'm sure it will all come to light eventually. It always does.

Please reconsider this proposed rule. It is unnecessary and ill-conceived. Far more beneficial would be for FINRA to find a way to welcome smaller brokers shut out by the NFA.

Sincerely,

Steve Gallagher
Evonne Doctor
Kathy Muller
Ernie Gazdag
Harry Engleman
John McCann
Diane Mumma-Wakabayashi
Ann Esaias
Dennis Nowicki
Richard J. Williams
Ray Figlewski
Mike Wietor
Chuck Sande
Paul Otlo
Kim Oliver
Tracy Forman
Richard Schmidt
Steven Gleason
Don Fortner
Irawan Susanto
Erik Pettersen
Brian Dawson
Mary McAllister
Patricia Barkman
Ray Figlewski
Larry Weis
Chrisjean Tiberti
Al Hanson
Keith T. Maring
Jerry J
Bob O'Brien
Tim Primavera Sr.
Pamela Cox
Alain Chevrot