

Hardly a great time to be suggesting another data collection project. Trust of bureaucrats when it comes to personal information is low and getting lower, with identity theft, surveillance, spying, and classification being current topics of conversation.

Don't know why my personal investment info needs to be part of a larger database than that in which it is already contained. I know that the reasons given for these undertakings are always positive in nature and not part of any nefarious scheme, but in the end bad things always tend to happen.

Count me as one person not at all interested in supporting this endeavor.