CASE SUMMARY

Claimant alleged that Respondent sold shares of Amati Communications Corp. ("Amati") stock from Claimant's account without his authorization.

Respondent denied each and every allegation of wrongdoing contained in Claimant's Claim. Respondent alleged that Claimant placed an order to buy stock without having sufficient equity in his account to meet the initial margin requirements; when the price of the stock went down and Claimant failed to deposit any additional funds or securities into his account, Respondent made an orderly liquidation of the under-margined position; this was its right under its contract with Claimant and in accordance with securities industry standards; the result was a debit balance in Claimant's account for which he was contractually liable; rather than pay his debt, Claimant demanded that Respondent "refund all of the money he has deposited with your company for investment purposes and money earned from stock trading"; when Respondent refused, Claimant unsuccessfully complained to the NASD and the SEC and demanded, in addition to the "refund," compensation for the profits he claimed he would have made had he been allowed to buy the stock without paying for it. Respondent also asserted affirmative defenses.

For its Counterclaim against Claimant, Respondent alleged that as a result of the margin liquidations necessitated by Claimant's failure to pay for his purchase of 30,000 shares of Amati stock, a debit balance arose in Claimant's account and further alleged that Claimant has failed to pay the debit balance.

Claimant denied the allegations contained in Respondent's Counterclaim and denied any liability to Respondent.
